

ABSTRACT

An extracellular portion of the HER2 molecule, essentially free of transmembrane and cytoplasmic portions, which is antigenic in animals. Isolated DNA encoding the extracellular portion; an expression vector containing the isolated DNA; and a cell containing the expression vector. A process for producing the extracellular domain. A vaccine containing the extracellular domain.